

Abstract

A process for increasing plant yield is described. Recombinant constructs containing polypeptides are expressed under the control of companion cell specific promoters. This results in improved phloem loading and leads to increases in biomass.